ADMINISTRATIVE/BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE:

The dreadful yellow fever epidemic in the summer of 1798, with its toll on expectant mothers, activated interest in founding a lying-in hospital in New York. Dr. David Hosack, an attending physician at New York Hospital, initiated an appeal for money. Alexander Hamilton was one of the first subscribers. In 1799, a commodious house at No.2 Cedar Street served as the hospital; but, because of financial difficulties, the house closed after the first year. An arrangement was then made to have the patients hospitalized in a ward of New York Hospital. It was during this period that medical students were allowed in maternity wards to witness delivery for the first time in this country.

The lying-in ward at New York Hospital was closed permanently in 1827, and the cooperative arrangement was terminated, probably because of a financial misunderstanding. Because of lack of public interest, nothing further was done until 1855 when a system of home care for women requiring assistance during confinement was implemented. During this period, money was saved to establish a lying-in hospital.

In 1887, two American medical students, James Wright Markoe and Samuel W. Lambert were learning obstetrical procedures on a mannequin at The Frauenklinik of Von Winkel in Munich. They were inspired to establish a similar dispensary, the Midwifery Dispensary, for teaching medical students in New York. This they did in 1890, using a home at 312 Broome Street. By coincidence, Samuel Lambert's father learned of the existence of the inactive philanthropic organization known as The Society of the Lying-In Hospital. Shortly thereafter, in 1890, this organization absorbed the Midwifery Dispensary, giving it the much-needed funds to expand and to improve its services.

John Pierpont Morgan, an affluent patient of Dr. Markoe, was responsible for the next important advance, the purchase in 1894 of the Hamilton Fish Mansion on Second Avenue and 17th Street to be used as the Lying-In Hospital. This was later expanded toward 18th Street. In 1899, the facilities were overtaxed and the need for a larger hospital was evident. The generosity of Morgan made possible the demolition of the mansion and the construction of a modern, eight-storied hospital that opened in 1902.

John Pierpont Morgan, Jr. carried on the philanthropy of his father; and, being concerned for the long range financial stability of the hospital, convinced John D. Rockefeller, Jr.; George F. Baker, Sr.; and George F. Baker, Jr. to join him in funding an association with New York Hospital. As a result, when New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center opened in 1932, the Lying-In Hospital became the Obstetrics and Gynecology Department of New York Hospital, occupying one of the pavilions along the East River.

Above history was revised and adapted from "History of the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center," an article by Ralph Engle, Jr., M.D., that first appeared in the medical center's Directory of Alumni and Staff, 1980.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE:

This collection is divided into six series Administration (1862-1942), Treasurer (1822-1940), Personnel (1890-1932), Historical Materials (1890-1939), Publications (1890-1989) and Patient Records (Restricted; 1890-1932):

Series I: Administration, 1799-1947

This series contains records pertaining to the administration and management of the Lying-In-Hospital including the Act of Incorporation from 1799, Bylaws, rules and regulations and minutes and reports of the Board of Governors and Medical Board. Medical board correspondence between James Markoe and Samuel Lambert is of interest.

Series II: Treasurer, 1822-1940

This series tells a great deal about the history of the institution. The day-to-day duties of the Treasurer are shown through correspondence with Secretary of the Society, Treasurer's Reports, account books, etc. The History of the Hospital can be traced through the Board of Governors files; the files on the Midwifery Dispensary that details the relationship between that institution and the Lying-In-Hospital which led to the 1892 merger of the two; the files relating to the acquisition and improvement of the Second Avenue Property where the Lying-In-Hospital was built in 1895; the Reports to the City of New York, Department of Finance; and the annual reports to the United Hospital Fund and the State of Board Charities.

Real estate dealings of the Society also figure prominently in the collection. There are files containing correspondence regarding various properties the Society owned in New York City. There are letters concerning payment on mortgages, loans, and interest, some of which are revealing of the lives of the nineteenth century New Yorkers who wrote them. There is also a box comprised entirely of abstracts of titles, indentures and insurance on other properties from the 1870s to the 1890's, including J. Pierpont Morgan.

Series III: Personnel, 1890-1932

This series consists of bound volumes containing lists of Attending Physicians and Assistant Attending Physicians, as well as indices to Register of Nurses and Nurses

Aids, and other staff, as well as a complaint log, recording complaints against nurses and actions taken. Also found in this series is a book of rules, circa 1900, and registers of student and staff diplomas

Series IV: Historical Materials, 1890-1939

This series contains materials relating to the history of the Lying-In-Hospital of New York, including Alumni Association records, programs for annual meetings; constitution and bylaws, scrapbooks containing news-clippings (many regarding J. Pierpont Morgan), various programs, appeals for funds, and some regarding Oliver H. Payne's donation to found Cornell University Medical College in 1898). There is also information about a building on Second Avenue, between 17th and 18th Streets as well as building and floor plans. Materials from a Bequest of Henry C. Frick, which includes copies of his will, papers and correspondence regarding investments, taxation, a trust agreement with the Union Trust Company of Pittsburgh, ledger sheets, financial statements, briefs and opinions of court cases.
